Summary

Explain why you are writing and what kind of response, reflection, or participation would be helpful.

1 Dear community

Open in your own voice. A community letter may be personal, reflective, technical, philosophical, celebratory, corrective, or invitational.

2 Why I am writing

Explain the moment, concern, opportunity, or appreciation that motivated the letter.

3 What I have heard and learned

Acknowledge contributions and perspectives fairly. This optional section can show how community discussion influenced the message.

4 Present understanding

Describe your current view without presenting it as the only acceptable position.

STATUS Reflection, proposal, interpretation, update, or decision. Label it honestly.

5 What remains open

Identify questions, disagreements, uncertainties, and decisions that still need collective work.

6 Proposed direction

Offer a direction without forcing contributors into one writing style, discipline, governance model, or technical framework.

Invitation to the community

Request the forms of participation that would be useful: critique, references, experiments, design alternatives, implementation, translation, documentation, or reflection. Welcome disagreement and preserve contributors' dignity.

Acknowledgements

Thank contributors with their consent.
